

01

The live map

A student you met at a summer camp asks you to share your location 'forever' on a map app so you can 'keep in touch.' You have only met them once.

What do you do?

02

Gone in 10 seconds

A friend sends you a disappearing photo of another student tripping in the hallway and says, 'Don't worry, it deletes itself.'

What does a screenshot do here, and what do you do?

03

Venting gone public

You vented about a tough practice in a group chat. Someone screenshotted it and posted it on their story with a laughing emoji.

What are your next steps?

04

Your celebrity name

A post says: 'Your celebrity name is your first pet plus the street you grew up on. Comment yours.' Your friends are all commenting.

Is this harmless?

05

The away game livestream

Your teammate wants to livestream from the bus on the way to an away game, showing your jerseys, the bus number and the road signs.

What would you suggest?

06

Forty strangers in the chat

You get added to a group chat with 40 people. You know about half of them. People start posting their phone numbers and home addresses for a party invite.

What do you do?

07

The fourth-grade account

You find your old account from fourth grade. It is still public, with videos of you in your school uniform and your old username.

What is the fix?

08

Field trip photo

You took a great class photo on the field trip. One classmate says, 'Please don't post me, my family doesn't allow it.'

What do you do?

09

Trading the original file

Someone in an online trading group asks you to send the original photo file of your sneakers 'for proof,' not a screenshot. The photo was taken in your bedroom.

What could the original file reveal?

10

Tag, you're it

Someone you don't know keeps tagging you in posts with your full name and school, and the tags show on your profile automatically.

What settings help?