

01

The crying call

Your phone rings from an unknown number. It sounds exactly like your mom, upset, saying she lost her wallet and needs you to send money from your payment app now.

What do you do?

02

The dream internship

A DM offers you a paid social media internship with a 'well-known brand.' They want your bank account number and a photo of your ID before any interview.

Real or fake, and how do you check?

03

Guaranteed scholarship

A letter and an email say you are a finalist for a scholarship you never applied for. You need to pay a $75 'reservation fee.'

What is the red flag, and who can help?

04

The joke edit

Your friend uses an AI app to put a classmate's face into an embarrassing video and wants to post it 'as a joke' in the class group chat.

What do you say and do?

05

Breaking news screenshot

A screenshot claims your school will switch to year-round classes next month. Everyone in the group chat is panicking.

How do you check before reacting?

06

The video call friend

A new online friend video calls you, but their face glitches when they turn their head and the call drops whenever you ask a specific question.

What might be happening?

07

The threat

Someone you met online says they have a picture of you, real or AI-made, and will send it to your followers unless you pay them tonight.

What are your first moves?

08

The fact-check fight

Your cousin shares an article from a site you have never heard of. The site's About page says it is 'independent and trusted.'

How would a fact-checker check it?

09

Too-perfect profile

An account with stunning photos and thousands of followers offers to promote your art for a small fee paid with a gift card.

What red flags do you see?

10

Real update, real route

You get a text that looks like it is from your school about early dismissal tomorrow. It has no link and tells you to check the district app.

How do you confirm it?
